

The Law of Georgia on Legal Entities under Public Law (LEPL) governs organizations established under Georgian law for public activities, granting them special legal capacity, including rights, obligations, and the ability to sue or be sued. These entities function under state control, carrying out public functions like education, culture, and state administration, and can engage in auxiliary entrepreneurial activities. The law establishes principles for their formation, operation, and relationship with state government bodies.

Document is available only in Georgian.